Honokono, April 30rn, 1892.

THE telegraphic report in the San Fran cisco Chronicle of the debate in the House Representatives at Washington on the 4th inst. on Mr. GEARY's Chinese Exclusion Bill shows that it was passed by an over whelming majority, the votes being 179 for and 43 against. The drastic nature of the Bill was frankly admitted by its author, who said, however, that he was satisfied that no measure short of it would effect the pur pose desired, namely, the total exclusion of the Chinese. When a Representative from Illinois pointed out that the Bill would be a violation of Treaty obligations, Mr. GEARY was concluded with China, the Chinese Government assured the American Ministers to keep them out, and it was because the served to render more imperative the cry for Americans relied upon that statement of the Chinese that the Treaty was made. He went on to accuse the Chinese Governbad faith and the continued violation of the spirit of the Treaty by doing all in their power, both through their officers at home and in America to encourage the emigration. This state. ment, however, is easier to make than to from Hamburg, left Singapore for this port yes ter C. LARREN, Men's Christian Association Hall," continued the preacher in touching upon the social evil, "that there are 10,000 fallen women in San Francisco.

This is exclusive of the Chinese and the negro quarters. If the same rigid restrictions imposed in the Chinese quarter were imposed throughout the city the social evil would be driven to the background and much lessened. We need stronger laws repressing gambling, drinking, pernicious literature, and amusements of a degrading character.' It is plain, therefore, that California has not been corrupted by the Chinese immigrants, and whatever shortcomings in respect of want of honesty, cleanliness, or morality of which they may be guilty, the Chinese element in the United States is not such a source of social danger as the American Press have for the past decade endeavoured to make out. The inner dark zone of a luminous flame has always been looked upon as a spice where practically nothing is taking place, but Prof. V R. Lewes has proven, as stated in a recent Royal Institution lecture, that in this portion of the flame the hydro-carbons are converted into acetylene, a gas which readily decomposes with heat into carbon and hydrogen. The decomposition take place in the luminous portion of the flame, and it is the liberated carbon which, being heated to incandescence, gives the light. The outer non-luminous part of the flame, instead of being an area of complete combustion. is so cooled by the in-rush of air that it is extinguished before combustion is completed, the into the air.

PRONUNCIATION. An Anglo-Chinese Dictionary, published at the Daily Press Office, Hongkong. For comprehensiveness and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon thom, are here given in extense. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming everyises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given the secents being carefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The typecraphy isplays the success of an attempt to make th Chinese and English type correspond in the size 23.— Kerosine Godown of body, thereby effecting a vast economy space, achieving a clearness not proviously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have heretofore charactarised Chinese publications. To illustrate the vast scope of the work the following facts are submitted for consideration:— Chalmers', Vocabulary contains about 16,000

Chinese characters and Medhurst's English and Chinese Dictionary about 100.000, whilst 36A Quarry Bay Sugar words, and upwards of 600,000 Chinese characters. Again, despite all the grammars and other elementary works as yet published, the student of this difficult language absolutely requires examples to display the various appli-cations and equivalents of different words which have one general meaning. Of these examples this work contains more than five times as many as any other Dictionary hitherto pub-

For practical purposes the arrangement the work is so complete, that a reference to its pages enables a person who understands English to communicate effectively with natives who understand nothing but Chinese. In this respect the work will be found indispensable to all Europeans residing in China, and to the natives themselves it explains subjects fully with which very few indeed of them are perfectly acquainted. To parties resident in England and interested in China it cannot but be invaluable occasion-

CHAPTER III. "Never Walk One Way and Look

The character of the two girls, which during their school life had presented little dissimil rity, became now strongly marked by noticeable differences: Harriet, despite her mother's serious talks and injunctions, was much dispirited, and seemed to derive no pleasure from the gay society life they had entered upon. While Jessie, on the contrary, found it all absorbing, and, it must be owned, her animation and ready wit made her a favourite. When George Lancaster called to renew his attentions to the unhappy Harrist, he invariably found her dull and listless. His utmost efforts to interest her and win her regard were spent in vain. The fussy politeness of her mother, who plainly encouraged his visits, would not have prevented his giving up the pursuit as a bac job, had not Jessie at such times appeared on the scene, and with her saucy repartees and lively manners, held him captive to the utmost length to which be daved prolong his visits. But that state of things could not last. So he bagan seriously to think of resigning all hope of the heiress (as he become more than ever convinced Harriet must be), and set himself in downright earnest, first to deserve, then to win, the younger sister, whose image was constantly present to his mental vision, and, who was (in a way he was numble to account for or resist) growing daily more dear to him. Really a good fellow at heart, but considerable spoilt by the over indulgence of his formerly doling father, he had become connected with a fast and dissolute set, soon after leaving the University, and as a natural consequence joined in not a few of their quastionable pleasures. "Your devoted father. "RANSTOCK." A sudden silence fell on them all. They respected the man that he had not sought to win favour by first producing the letter. George had, as he told them, planned to rejoin his father that night, and spend a week with him. When he rose to depart. Randal asked to be allowed to accompany him; as for a certain distance their road lay in the same direction, and the offer was readily accepted Taking a hearty farewell of Mrs. Horton and

Harriet, he found to his great chagrin that Jeseie had disappeared. As they went down the staircase, littered with flowers and evergreens, during the process of decoration for a coming dance. Randal suddenly remembered that he had left something in the drawing-room, and returned for it, while George looked wistfully up and down the large hall hoping to see Jessie. Suddenly she emerged from a door at the far end. She walked demurely up to him, a spray of tea roses in her hand. "Are these worth wearing?" she asked, repeating his own words when presenting the carnations, and holding them out, her eyes cast down, apparently studying the hall floor. "Are they not," he reforted rapturously sontching not at the flowers, but at their owner. "I will keep them, as I will keep this precious lovely flower I now hold against my heart, for ever. And I really thought I should not see you again to day." he continued. "Oh Jessie, how can I leave you, when I have only just got you? Mind, you'll come to 'The Towers' soon. You shall!" he added, masterfully, as she was about to raise some objection. Then, bending suddenly down, ere she was aware, he took the kiss that he had so vainly coveted an hour ago.

They heard Randal's footsteps on the stairs, and parted hurriedly. It seemed that the two men, during their short walk, came to an understanding, for as they separated they shook hands warmly. When their visitors left them, Mrs. Horton was in danger, as she said, of being devoured by ber children, such endearments and demonstrative thanks was she subjected to. The division of money between her daughters was soon decided by her. Harriet, her husband's child, was marrying the poorer man, she therefore should have the Oakley Park Estate, where in the house which was now in the course of they so wished it, could live together. The larger share of money was also apportioned to Harriet, since Jessie, her own darling child would still have a generous downy, and was marrying into a family wealthy in the extreme. . "After all it doesn't sound bad," she said to herself, when thinking over the scene of the morning, and again reliearsing, as though to an imaginary visitor. "Allow me to introduce my daughters; Mrs. Randal of Oakley Park," with a sweeping movement to her right, and then with a corresponding action to the left, " My daughter the Viscountess Ranstock."
